| The direct object | Human | que quien(es) (only in clauses between commas) el/la/los/las que/cual(es) | Sus amigos, a quienes vi ayer, no le dijeron nada. Her friends, whom I saw yesterday, didn't tell her anything. | The relative pronoun quienes refers to sus amigos , is the object of vi , accompanied of the personal a (ver requires the use of the personal a if the direct object is specific and human). |
| | Non-human | que el/la/los/las que/cual(es) | La camisa que compré ayer estaba de oferta. The shirt that I bought yesterday was on sale. | The relative pronoun que refers to la camisa and is the direct object of compré (the shirt is what I bought). |

IMPORTANT

Personal a is used to mark direct object nouns that are specific and human.

In direct object relative clauses, personal a is required with relative pronouns: quien(es), el/la/los/las que/cual(es).

When the relative pronoun que is used in a defining relative clause (no commas), the personal a is not used:

Los niños que vimos ayer eran mis sobrinos. [The kids we saw yesterday were my nephews.]
